I have devised what I think is a much better set of codes than the Chapman set. Mine were derived from a simple algorithm that maximizes recognizability, and avoids the need to memorize large numbers of cryptic codes. All but about 5% of my codes are simply the first four letters of the name itself. It's true that my codes are longer—4 or even 5 letters, compared with 3 for Chapman, but this is tiny price to pay for the benefits. Just 14 of my 158 codes extend to five letters; these are all suffixes standing for the directions (N,S,E,W), G for Greater, or M for Mid.

The Chapman Codes BELOW come from a list downloaded from GENUKI. Although this list includes all of the new British county names, including those created as a result of the several waves of sweeping governmental re-organizations since 1973, it does not include any of the old names for county boroughs, or for counties of themselves, or any of the new names for county councils, or unitary authorities, except for old London, Manchester, and York, and the new metropolitan county of Greater Manchester. However, my codes for entities that may be considered cities, may be derived in the same way as other codes (from the first four letters of their names) with the suffix “c” appended—except for London, which is just LNDN.

Where the new (post-1973) county names appear amidst the following lists, they are flagged with “*”s. Hopefully I will never have to use these codes for genealogical purposes, but they are included to make this list of counties comprehensive.
